Stylish lighting in the new holiday residences of the "Vieux Valais", Riederalp (VS)

At 1925 metres above sea level, Riederalp blends into the Aletsch Arena. In the newly built "Vieux Valais" estate, interior architect Roger Buser from room 42 designed a 3.5 and a 4.5 room holiday residence with a Scandinavian touch.

The interiors show up as open living spaces with kitchen and dining area as well as living and recreation area in the basement. Spacious bedrooms are located on the upper floor. Bright oak wood, white surfaces and soft fabrics form the basis of the materialisation concept, complemented by black fittings and lights. As "skilful eye-catchers", as Roger Buser explains, the RIBAG lights in black were chosen because they "optimally complement the clear, restrained structure of the interior design".

The brilliant light of the KIVO, VIOR and VIOR bold lamps skilfully sets off the chosen materialisation and offers a unique interplay of light and shadow. "In the evening, the lighting quality of the RIBAG lamps is particularly visible, creating a beautiful ambience. Thanks to the timeless design of the ceiling and pendant lamps, they blend in particularly well with the interior design," Roger Buser continues. Whether for accent lighting or for ambient lighting, the rooms can be illuminated in different ways depending on the individual use, thanks to separate activations of the lamps.

A lot of emphasis was placed on quality and design throughout the project. "RIBAG is a company that has been known to us for many years and always convinces us with innovations. Especially the quality, the design and the delivery reliability were important decision criteria for us. We also appreciate the familiar, uncomplicated and helpful cooperation," concludes Roger Buser.
